

What's Happening at Cornell Farms

October, 2008

We've had a great fall so far. Since the rain held off, we were able to get a lot of the field work done and the manure hauled out of the barn and the pens.

Here's a picture of the oats in the swath, just before they are combined.

Here's Kim swathing the oats. They are then combined (Gordon behind the wheel) to separate the grain from the stocks. The grain is emptied into the bins and the stocks are baled into straw bales.

Garnet was also busy spreading manure. It is spread on the hay fields to increase fertility naturally.

We also got some of our fields worked up and disced; ready for planting in the spring.

Finally, T. Nile performed in the barn as the last concert for the 2008 season. Her performance was fantastic. She will be performing at the Winnipeg Folk Festival in 2009 so hopefully we can have her back next summer.
